An entirely new perspective on where the global strategic architecture — and modern civilization — is headed ...

With key chapters on defense doctrine for future wars; emerging intelligence realities; the new logistics priorities; cyber war in the new age, and much more ...

When do civilizations begin ... and end? And how?

Is this what we are witnessing as the 21st Century matures?

And as a totally new global architecture presents us with an unrecognizable world?

What does it all mean for the stability of nation-states, the prosperity of societies, the way we live and wage wars over the coming decades?

UnCivilization: Urban Geopolitics in a Time of Chaos outlines how we are already entering an age in which global population levels will begin to decline substantially, even as urbanization and economically- and security-driven trans-national migration gather pace. Population decline and movement patterns are also intersecting with economic and scientific patterns, while urban social attitudes — the politics of urban societies — have created a revolutionary new political, social, and strategic reality.

This is an entirely new game. It's time to learn the rules.
